

Workplace Innovation Wednesdays – April 2018 – week four

Do leadership development programmes work?

We're launching our Leadership for Workplace Innovation programme, providing you with a unique opportunity to become a Workplace Innovation Practitioner or Senior Practitioner. The programme offers a range of flexible options including distance learning and in-house facilitation, leading an Institute for Leadership and Management (ILM) Level 5 qualification combined with practical support for workplace change. Participants will benefit from a state-of-the-art online learning platform, peer-to-peer exchanges of experiences with companies on similar journeys, and individual or team coaching.

This will be the 'must have' programme for current and aspiring leaders. Discover more or contact us for a friendly chat!

Getting results from leadership development

Does leadership and management training create the types of behaviours that businesses and public sector organisations need?

Too often the answer is no, with failure to manage day-to-day pressures and entrenched work practices outmuscling new, but ostensibly untried, ideas.

Taught courses have value in introducing participants to the concepts and approaches that underpin effective leadership and sustainable transformation, but the value of these concepts and approaches is only realised when participants can apply them in concrete situations.
